

OFFICERS IN CASUALTY LIST Fates of Four Reported Officially Were Already Known

MAJOR ALLEN IS SLAIN

Hundred and Sixty-five Pennsylvanians Named, Fifty-eight from This Section

The names of five Philadelphia officers appear on the official casualty list today, the fate of four of them having been previously reported through unofficial channels.

The death in action of Major Alfred Reginald Allen, of the 214th Infantry, was announced on October 29, while the fact that Lieutenant Philip N. Rhineland, of the aviation corps, a nephew of Bishop Rhineland, had been brought down by German flyers was learned last week.

Captain William W. Bodine, son of Samuel T. Bodine, president of the United Gas Improvement Company, was wounded more than three months ago and has been back with his company more than two months, yet his name only appears on the official record today.

The fact that Lieutenant Stewart A. McDowell, of the aviation corps, had been wounded and captured and was now at Camp Karlsruhe, was published several weeks ago.

The death in action of Lieutenant Harold W. Painter, of 1510 South Lindenwood street, was reported by his uncle, Samuel Tiley, by the War Department yesterday, though the young officer's name has not yet appeared on the official list.

The total for the combined casualty lists today is 1469, including 185 Pennsylvanians. The honor roll for Philadelphia and vicinity is sixty-eight, of which number fifty have been killed in action, eleven have died of accidents or disease and one of wounds. Thirty-four have been wounded, three have been gassed, five are missing and one is a prisoner.

SKETCHES OF THE HEROES

Private George W. McMillin, wounded severely twice by shrapnel as he lay in a shell hole. His lieutenant, who was with him, honored McMillin's injuries and a few seconds later was killed in both legs. Private McMillin, who "grew so hot" as McMillin put it in a letter to his mother, Mrs. M. McMillin, 5432 Baltimore, was the only one of the officers pulled themselves out of the shell hole and crawled two miles to a field dressing station. They had many narrow escapes on the way, but arrived safely after a strenuous journey.

Private McMillin was a member of the old Third Regiment and when his unit was called into the Federal service shortly after his country entered the war, he had to report at five days' notice. It cost him $3500 to close out his business in such short order. He is now in the base hospital conducted by the Jefferson Hospital unit, of this city, and is rapidly recovering.

After reaching France, McMillin was transferred from the 110th, to which he had been attached, to the 113th, which was reorganized to the 109th, and made headquarters messenger. A shell put him out of action on September 27. In a recent letter that after joining the headquarters company of the 109th he was chatting with the chaplain who had the bunk room, McMillin was surprised to find that the latter was a cousin, Vincent Conwell by name, of Perry-second and Market streets. Private McMillin has a brother, Edward McMillin, in the 164th Engineers. Though both were fighting in the same section they had never been able to get together, added George McMillin.

Lieutenant Harold W. Painter, killed in action, enlisted in the old Sixth Regiment, N. G. P., in October of 1916, saw service at the Mexican border, and was transferred to the 113th Infantry when the Sixth was reorganized at Camp Hancock, following the entrance of this country into the war. He secured permission to attend the officers' training camp at Fort Benning, Ga., and was commissioned second lieutenant, but did not receive it until after the regiment had reached France. Then he was attached to Company K, to which he had formerly belonged as a private.

Lieutenant Painter was twenty-three years old and a graduate of the West Hazleton High School. He was employed by Gimbel Brothers when he joined the colors. The parents of the young hero are dead, and he was brought up by an uncle.

Samuel Tiley, of 1210 South Lindenwood street; Lieutenant Charles Orr, a tentative of Lieutenant Painter, was killed in the July campaign.

Private Patrick Joseph Egan, killed in action, was a member of company A, 315th Infantry, Philadelphia's 10th regiment, of selective service men. He met his death on September 26 during the terrific fighting north of Verdun. Private Egan was born in Ireland and had only received his final naturalization papers one day when he was drafted in May of this year. He volunteered for immediate service overseas and was sent to France in the 10th regiment. He made his home in this city with his brother-in-law, Charles Quinn, of 2641 North Nineteenth street, and was attached to his mother and four sisters. He was a member of St. Columba's Holy Name Society and of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and was employed at the Union League before being called to the colors.

312th Infantry, this city's own national army unit. He was a typographer by trade and was formerly employed in the composing room of the EVENING PUBLIC LEADER.

Private James F. Birney, reported wounded in today's official casualty list, is a member of Company G, 123rd Infantry. He is now convalescing at the Colonia Hospital in the southern part of New Jersey.

At the time he was drafted he was doing Government work out in the west, he was therefore sent to camp at Waco, Tex. One year previous to being drafted he was honorably discharged from the navy after three years of service. His father, William Birney, of 126 Seville street, visited his son not long ago and says the young soldier is rapidly regaining his health.

Private Elmer Smith, who died of influenza in France, lived with his parents at 578 Martin street, was only eighteen years old when he joined the colors. He enlisted as an electrician and was trained at Fort Slocum, N. Y. He was a member of Company G, 118th Infantry, and served with the 109th Infantry. Young Smith made his home with his mother, Mrs. George Shannon, at Lansford, Pa., and is rapidly recovering.

Private John Jerrico, of Company A, Sixty-first Infantry, Regular Army, was wounded on October 11, but is rapidly recovering in a base hospital, according to a letter received by his sister, Miss Marion Jerrico, 2603 West Oxford street. Jerrico was drafted in November of last year, trained at Camp Meade and eventually was transferred to the regular army and sent overseas in March. He recovered in short order and rejoined his regiment. The young soldier had been in the latter part since he reached France, and of whose existence he is not yet aware.

Private Max Epstein, reported missing since the 25th of September, went to Camp Meade on the 1st of May and sailed for France with the 312th Infantry in July. He had been in Philadelphia only two years before he was drafted, coming from Ireland where his parents still live. He did general work in the printing plant, and was drafted at 2326 West Thompson street.

Private Joseph F. Ney, reported wounded in today's official casualty list, is a member of Company D, 119th Machine-gun Battalion. He is reliably reported that he landed in France with his unit when a shell burst a few feet away from him, according to a letter received by his parents at 6032 Spruce street, trained at Camp Dix, N. J., and eventually was assigned to Company A, 119th Machine-gun Battalion, and left for France in February of this year. His brother, Private Henry F. Ney, died of pneumonia on October 19, 1917, and was buried in France.

Private Vincent Stellar, reported missing on September 21, is a member of Company F, 215th Infantry, and was trained at Camp Meade. So far his relatives, who live at 916 Spring street, have received no word from him, but hope that he was taken prisoner and will be released soon.

Private Daniel E. Lee, who died of pneumonia on October 19, went to Camp Meade in May, was enrolled in Company G, 215th Infantry, and was trained at Camp Meade. So far his relatives, who live at 916 Spring street, have received no word from him, but hope that he was taken prisoner and will be released soon.

Private Michael Bonner, reported missing since the 25th of September, went to Camp Meade on the 1st of May and sailed for France with the 312th Infantry in July. He had been in Philadelphia only two years before he was drafted, coming from Ireland where his parents still live. He did general work in the printing plant, and was drafted at 2326 West Thompson street.

It reported on today's official casualty list, as gassed. He is a member of Company F, 215th Infantry. After a short stay at Camp Meade he was sent to France in July of this year. Before joining the colors he was employed at Camps shipyard.

Mrs. M. Ney, of 1506 East York street, their mother, is very proud of her sons. She has received mail from both that states "We are acting bravely and we are itching for one more smack at the boches."

Lieutenant Stewart A. McDowell, reported a prisoner in today's official casualty list, was brought down over the German lines on September 16 and his fate was made known to his mother through unofficial sources several weeks ago. He is now in the hospital at Karlsruhe, being transferred to the American Aviation Section soon after the United States entered the war. He is a graduate of Brown Prep and was in business with his father when he fell into the hands of the enemy.

Private George W. Mitchell, Company M, 11th Infantry, was blinded by mustard gas on September 6, but has partially recovered his sight and expects eventually to be able to see as well as after. He enlisted in August of last year, joining the 31st Regiment, N. G. P., and was National Guard units were reorganized into the 11th Infantry. He is a printer by trade, and lived at 2550 Meion street. He is thirty-five years old, and was beyond the draft age limit, but felt that it was his duty to fight for his country.

Private Samuel Matlock, Company B, 215th Infantry, died of pneumonia on October 14. He was twenty-eight years old and was drafted on May 27. He was a machinist. His younger brother, John, has recently been sent to France. He lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Lockhart, at 3018 North 13th street.

Private Ernest Uebel has been wounded, according to a letter received by his sister, Mrs. A. M. Ritchie, 621 Market street, Gloucester. He was struck in the face by a piece of shrapnel, he said, but expected to be back on duty by the time the letter reached his relatives. Uebel was drafted a year ago, trained at Camp Dix and has been in France since last June.

Private Michael Monnon, Company D, 215th Infantry, was wounded in action on September 26. He enlisted in June, 1917, and trained at Camp Dix, sailing for France last May. His Philadelphia address is 612 Chestnut street, but was formerly employed in Atlantic City, at the Hotel Traymore.

Private John F. Garland, Company H, 119th Infantry, was reported to have been killed in action September 27, but a friend in the 119th Infantry, this city's own national army unit, is a member of Company G, 123rd Infantry. He is now convalescing at the Colonia Hospital in the southern part of New Jersey.
